Welcome back for 2012!

Professor John Daly, Head of the World Health Organization Collaborating Centre at the University of Technology, Sydney, (WHO CC UTS) and Dean of the Faculty of Nursing, Midwifery and Health, would like to warmly greet all of our colleagues and collaborative partners across the Pacific and around the world for the first time in 2012.

It has been a busy few months since we were last in touch and this newsletter gives an update of WHO CC UTS projects, as well as our usual collection of important dates, articles and resources.

Please don't hesitate to contact us if you have any suggestions for content, events to circulate, or if you wish to stop receiving this newsletter.

If you are feeling technologically inclined you can also follow Michele Rumsey, Director of Operations and Development of the WHO CC UTS on Twitter at whoccmichele, or visit our website.

Midwives visit UTS as part of the Papua New Guinea Maternal and Child Health Initiative Induction

Professor Caroline Homer, Director of the Papua New Guinea Maternal and Child Health Initiative is pleased to announce that WHO CC UTS held the first induction program for eight expert clinical midwifery facilitators recruited to work with their educator counterparts at four midwifery schools in Papua New Guinea (PNG), and two obstetricians also recruited for the initiative.

Funded by AusAID and run in collaboration with the World Health Organization Papua New Guinea Office (WHO PNG) and the PNG National Department of Health, the Maternal and Child Health Initiative targets midwifery education in PNG. These eight midwives will provide support to the education and midwifery training systems across the country with the purpose of improving PNG's progress towards the Millennium Development Goals in improving maternal health, practice and care.

The Evolving Threat of Antimicrobial Resistance - Options for Action

A new WHO book launched on 8 March 2012, summarises information on antimicrobial

The four day induction at UTS was an opportunity to prepare the eight clinical midwifery facilitators for their roles in PNG. It will be followed by a two week intensive induction program in PNG with the WHO PNG office, their educator counterparts and two obstetrician colleagues.

“It was great to come together as a collective group before the midwifery team go off to work in-country. Five midwives in the group have been working recently in similar roles in PNG so they also had valuable knowledge and experience to share with the group,” said WHO CC UTS Director Michele Rumsey.

One of the midwives going to PNG as part of this program said, “I am keen to return and get straight back into it because I have already established relationships with midwifery students and educators in that area (Port Moresby) and I was starting to see positive change.”

The midwives will be working in pairs at midwifery schools in Port Moresby and in the regional areas of Goroka and Madang from March 2012. The induction also marks the beginning of the research component of the Initiative, which will track the successes and challenges of this model of health development over the next two years and undertake an important monitoring and evaluation role. Understanding the Pacific's adaptive capacity to emergencies in the context of climate change

WHO CC UTS is partnering with the Institute for Sustainable Futures (ISF) in a one year research project funded by Australia's National Climate Change Adaptation Research Facility. The aim of the project is to inform policy makers about how climate change is likely to impact on Australia's capacity to respond to disasters in the Pacific, and how the emergency and humanitarian responses of Pacific Island Countries (PICs) will also be affected by a changing climate.

The primary objectives of the research are:

- To provide recommendations to policy makers and practitioners in the Australian and Pacific disaster and emergency response sectors on current adaptive capacity of PICs in relation to climate related disasters, and what resources are likely to be needed in the coming years to enhance this capacity; focusing on the immediate humanitarian needs post-disaster, including health care; food and nutrition; water and sanitation and psychosocial needs.

- To understand the Australian emergency services and related organisations' capacity and obligations to assist PICs in times of disaster and whether there is adequate capacity to meet future needs due to a changing climate, allowing for better planning and thus more effective response in times of disaster.

A conversation about climate change and emergency and disaster response raised the interesting question of national response to disasters: is it multidisciplinary or coordinated in parallel? Further discussion covered topics including competencies for emergency and disaster response and the current state of nursing and midwifery curriculum development.

It was also decided that the SPCNMOA steering committee will regroup and begin preparations for the upcoming SPCNMOA Meeting which will be held on 17 - 22 November in Melbourne, Australia this year. Visit the South Pacific Nurses Forum website.

AusAID ALA Round 10 2012

We are preparing for Round 10 of the AusAID Australian Leadership Awards 2012, including a leadership capacity building workshop which will be held at UTS in June. This year the Fellows participating in the program are future nursing and midwifery leaders from Fiji, Niue, Samoa, Tokelau, Tonga and Tuvalu.

A reference group meeting was also held for the Fellows from PNG, Solomon Islands, Vanuatu, Nauru, Kiribati and Cook Islands from the Round 8 2011 ALA program. We aim to keep you up to date on the stories and progress of the Fellows throughout the year.
